QATAR

Tricon's first project in Qatar was on the Doha Asian Games back in 2006, and while the stadia sector has been particularly busy for Tricon's teams over recent years, Qatar's growing food scene is leading to many new, exciting hospitality projects. The diversity of culture and food is prevalent across a number of sectors, and is all part of the Qatar National Vision 2030. In the last few years we have seen food from all over the world, created by international chefs, featured and has enabled Tricon's teams to be part of this growth.

BAHRAIN

While many cuisines are now international, it is incumbent on our design teams to understand also local cuisines and design implications, as these are always much in demand in hospitality destinations. The food scene in Bahrain has morphed over recent years moving away from international franchises to more home-grown brands led by a strong wave of entrepreneur-led food businesses. Tricon has worked on projects with international hotel brands to develop some exciting destinations.

OMAN

With almost half of Oman's population made up of expats, the food scene is continuously evolving. One 'product' of globalisation is as people move around, so do their food. Arabic, Indian, Turkish and Mediterranean kitchens and restaurants can be found in almost all the projects we have worked on in country. But, other than these major food influences, smaller or less known cuisines are also starting to flood Oman, creating an even more eclectic choice, coupled with a growing online food delivery service.
